Sleep and Mental Health in Children and Teens

Behavioral Interventions to End Bedtime Problems and Help Kids Sleep

It's not just fatigue and decreased energy. Sleep deprivation can have serious negative effects on kids' behavior, performance, and relationships.

It can show up as inattention, hyperactivity, and impulsivity ... poor grades ... irritability and argumentativeness ... conflict with siblings and friends ... mood and anxiety symptoms ... lack of energy for sports and other activities.

Miss a sleep disorder and you may misdiagnose your client. If you don't address sleep, you'll be unlikely to shift your clients into the relief they deserve - leaving them exhausted and struggling.

Join Catherine Darley, ND, a leader in integrative sleep medicine who has helped people of all ages sleep well without medication, in this dynamic 1-day seminar designed to help you:

- Customize an ideal sleep environment for children and teens
- Get accurate and useful sleep diaries to plan treatment
- Transition kids between awake and asleep using wind-down activities, light exposure, and cognitive strategies
- Include the family in treatment, and weigh in on issues like sleep training strategies and co-sleeping arrangements
- And much more!

Register today to get the skills you need to make your treatment plans more effective and get the kids in your practice the rest they need!

Objectives

1. Analyze the relationships between insufficient sleep and cognitive and emotional problems in children.
2. Integrate an understanding of sleep architecture and circadian rhythms into case conceptualization of clients' sleep-related complaints.
3. Conduct a sleep-focused clinical interview with child and adolescent clients.
4. Analyze data from children's sleep diaries to plan treatment.
5. Employ arousal reduction strategies to improve sleep outcomes in children.
6. Devise strategies to include family members in a plan to improve young clients' sleep.
